

Hot Sleepover

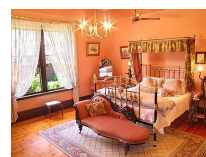

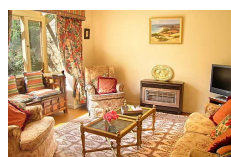

Comments by Christina Pfeiffer Feb 2009, appearing in the 'Weekend Age' on the Fire Station Inn

'Imagine nodding off in the room with a big red fire engine parked next to your bed. The star of the Fire Station Inn's Fire Engine Suite is none other than an International Lend Lease fire engine (circa 1942), still in the working order. In 1904, the building became a working fire station for the Metropolitan Fire Brigade Service; today the Fire Engine Suite occupies the space where the fire engines were once parked. The decor is an eclectic jumble of fire station paraphernalia; there's the original fireman's pole, fireman's uniforms, bi-folding fire station doors and cushions with fire truck themes.

Restored red-hooded bedroom lights hang on the walls. Modern comforts include a large double spa and heated bathroom floor tiles. There's also under-floor heating in the kitchen which has a jarrah bar top, mini bar, microwave and dishwasher. A red antique prison door with a square peep hole adds to the fun atmosphere'.
